Addressing Problem Behavior in Schools: Part III - Creating a Positive Support Plan (3 Part Series)

This course in the third in a three-part series on Functional Behavioral Assessment, and explores the process of developing, implementing, and monitoring Functional Behavioral Assessments. Today, educators at all grade levels face a growing number of students whose behavior challenges the success of daily classroom instruction. Fortunately, teachers are usually able to rely on standard strategies for addressing classroom misbehavior, such as solid teaching practices, clear rules and expectations, being physically close to their students, and praising and encouraging positive behaviors. Either independently or with the support of colleagues, they are able to find a successful solution to the problem. However, for some students -- both with and without disabilities -- these tactics fail to produce the desired outcome and may actually worsen an already difficult situation.

Aging and Long-Term Care

Aging can be defined as the accumulation of changes in an organism or object over time. Aging in humans refers to a multidimensional process of physical, psychological, and social change. Some dimensions of aging grow and expand over time, while others decline. Reaction time, for example, may slow with age, while knowledge of world events and wisdom may expand. Research shows that even late in life potential exists for physical, mental, and social growth and development. Aging is an important part of all human societies reflecting the biological changes that occur, but also reflecting cultural and societal conventions. Human age is usually measured in full years. Caring for someone who is aging is very important, and this course provides descriptions of how to do this effectively.

Autism for Family Members

Whether you are a parent a brother, aunt, uncle or grandparent, understanding autism and what it means for the person and their family assists with achieving the best outcome for all. "Autism for Families" is a short course designed to assist parents and other family members with understanding what autism is and how it affects their family member. While parents can become quite expert with regard to how autism affects their son or daughter, other members of the family can often be left out and sidelined. Everyone involved in the life of a person with autism has a role to play in supporting both the individual and the parents who are often isolated in their understanding and support of their child. By educating the whole family, individuals are more able to support each other and maximize the outcomes for all concerned. Training hours is approximately 5 hours.

TRAINING HOURS - 1 Training Hour

Cost Without CEs - $130.00

Autism in the Classroom

No classroom teacher or teacher aide can be expected to be an expert on autism. This course will help you understand some of what you see and some of the more recent information about autism. This will be especially useful to those who have not received autism specific training in their teacher education programs. This course will also provide guidance of positive behavioral supports aimed at helping children with autism develop in both the classroom and their wider community.

Community Living and Supports

As the trend moves away from living in an institutional setting to smaller group facilities and independent living, challenges arise for those with developmental disabilities. Many of these individuals have never been taught the basic skills of caring for themselves and managing their own daily lives. Because of this, it is important to support adults with developmental disabilities by providing services that will maximize individual development, community inclusion, independence, and their contribution to the society in which they live.

TRAINING HOURS - 3 Training Hours

Cost Without CEs - $60.00

Cultural Competency: An Introduction

As clinicians, it is important to put considerable effort into developing Cultural Competence when working with clients. This means examining our biases and prejudices, developing cross-cultural skills, searching for role models, and spending as much time as possible with other people who share a passion for Cultural Competence. This course will give you an introduction to the main concepts of Cultural Competency, and what is required to become culturally competent.

Data Collection

Challenging behavior is the one thing that continues to consume our time, resources and emotion in the work we do. The more efficient we become at supporting people to change their behavior, the closer we get to achieving the outcomes we strive toward. Understanding whether our efforts to support behavior change are working, is the foundation of any effective behavior support plan. To know this....we need data! Data Collection is a "quick course" of study in why we need to collect data and covers the fundamentals of how to do so. This includes graphing and how to ensure the data you collect is reliable.

Dual Diagnosis - Developmental Disability and Mental Illness (New Zealand Only)

Perhaps the most challenging clinical aspect of providing mental health care to people with developmental disabilities is the diagnostic assessment of psychiatric disorders. Although it has been reported that persons with developmental disabilities experience the full range of psychiatric disorders, at rates higher than the general population, many mental disorders, for various reasons, are misdiagnosed, under-diagnosed, or undiagnosed in this population. The degree of accuracy of diagnostic assessment with this population is critical to best practice as it provides the foundation for treatment and service planning. This course will explore Dual Diagnosis and possible treatment processes for people with dual diagnoses, and recommendations for providing Dual Diagnosis services.

Emergency Preparedness and Response

This course has been designed to give you and your colleagues an understanding of the emergencies that you need to be prepared for, including specific industry information for schools, hospitals, and other workplaces. Workplace safety during an emergency is very important, and well planned procedures and plans can mean the difference between life and death. The course covers Earthquakes, Floods, Hurricanes, and Tornadoes.

TRAINING HOURS - 2.5 Training Hours

Cost Without CEs - $50.00

Functional Communication and Visual Supports

Visual supports are a way of making auditory information visual. Visual Supports are an effective instructional tool. Visual supports organize a sequence of events, enhancing the student's ability to understand, anticipate and participate in those events. Visual supports supplement verbal instruction, clarifying the information for the student and increasing comprehension. Visual supports can be used to cue communication, providing reminders of what to do and say in a situation. This course will provide you with tools to provide visual supports to help communicate with individuals diagnosed with Autism.

Quality of Life

The World Health Organization (WHO) Global Age-Friendly Cities Project has involved 35 cities around the world in analyzing their communities and neighborhoods through the lens of the WHO Active Aging Framework. This framework shifts city planning away from a "needs-based" approach toward a "rights-based" approach that recognizes people should have equal opportunity and treatment as they grow older. "Active aging" is about more than just "healthy aging"; the concept entails enhancing quality of life by optimizing opportunities for health, participation, and security as people age. This course will look at the concept of creating age-friendly communities, and healthy aging.

Understanding Prader-Willi Syndrome

Prader-Willi syndrome is a genetic disorder that occurs in approximately one out of every 22,000 births. Prader-Willi syndrome affects males and females with equal frequency and affects all races and ethnicities and is recognized as a common genetic cause of childhood obesity. This course examines the cause of Prader-Willi syndrome and then common symptoms associated with it. It also explores ways to manage and treat over eating and obesity, growth-hormone therapy, and other possible conditions that may be related to, or caused by, Prader-Willi syndrome.
